Widespread Apathy And Marked Distrust Of Jewish Voters Toward Nixon And Kennedy, Rumors Of Anti-Semitism, Disturb Both Parties

Strategists of both major parties are worried over the marked apathy of what they call "the Jewish vote" in New York, writes Homer Bigart, in the New York Times. They concede privately that the Presidential candidates have evoked little warmth among voters of Jewish faith, referred to as "Jewish voters."

At this early stage of the campaign, this group, if it is a group, continues to regard both Vice President Nixon and Senator John F. Kennedy with varying degrees of distrust.

This was borne out in a sampling of opinion among Jews in the city and suburbs.

"Thank God, we don't have to vote for both of them," was a typical reaction.

The dispassion of Jewish voters is particularly disturbing to the Democrats. For despite a considerable shift to General Eisenhower in 1952 and 1956, the Jews, most political analysts agree, have remained more heavily Democratic than any other ethno-religious group in the last twenty years. Apathy in this group would hurt the Democrats more than the Republicans.

New York, a crucial state in a Presidential election, has a Jewish population exceeding 2,400,000, nearly 15 per cent of the total population.

Is there a Jewish vote? Politicians say there is. To prove its existence they point to the "balanced ticket" that both parties always try to present to the voters of New York, says the New York Times. The balanced ticket is one that includes at least one Protestant, one Catholic, one Jew.

Yet many persons interviewed resented the suggestion that their voting behavior was influenced by the fact that they were Jewish.

"The so-called Jewish vote is a myth, a harmful myth," said Louis Hollander, chairman of the executive council of the state American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations.

The brusque, burly 67-year-old labor leader gave his views at headquarters of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. He is vice president of the Union. Its membership, once almost exclusively Jewish, is now heavily Negro and Puerto Rican.

"There is no Jewish vote and there is no labor vote," Mr. Hollander emphatically said. "Remember what happened to John L. Lewis when he turned against Roosevelt? He tried to swing the labor vote to Wendell Willkie, but he couldn't even deliver his own mining districts."

Mr. Hollander said he did not believe Mr. Kennedy's Roman Catholicism would bother working-class Jews.

In denying the existence of "the Jewish vote," Mr. Hollander meant that Jews do not vote as a monolithic bloc, that all Jews do not react the same way to candidates and issues.

It was pointed out, however, by several officials of Jewish communal organizations that heavily Jewish districts showed a definite pattern of voting behavior.

Will Maslow, active executive director of the American Jewish Congress, cited polls and other studies tending to show that Jewish voters were attracted to candidates with liberal and internationalist views.

Others observed that the Jewish affinity for liberal candidates sometimes transcended ethnic loyalties, reports the New York Times. This was particularly true, they said, in campaigns for "high visibility offices" — posts commanding high prestige, such as Governor, Senator or Mayor.

Some recalled Mayor Wagner's unsuccessful campaign for Senate in 1956 against Attorney General Jacob K. Javits, saying that most Jewish voters stuck with Mayor Wagner, a Catholic Democrat, as the "more liberal" of the two candidates even though Mr. Javits, the Republican candidate, was Jewish.

As for the choice between Mr. Nixon and Mr. Kennedy, many Jewish voters in the middle and upper income groups, said privately that they found themselves in an unhappy predicament.

Mr. Kennedy has the more liberal voting record, they agreed. He has a good voting record on civil rights and on immigration bills. Moreover, no charge of anti-Semitism has ever been raised against him and he has long been regarded as friendly to Israel, although there is a division waiting the so-called "Jewish group" on this issue.

However, there is a current of distrust of his Catholicism and an active dislike of his father, Joseph P. Kennedy. Fears that the Catholic Church and the elder Kennedy would influence the behavior of Mr. Kennedy if he won the Presidency were raised.

The Catholicism issue was less lively among Jews in the lower income groups. This seemed to support the prediction of Democrats that Jews of lower income were "safe" and that the heavily Jewish lower-income districts of Brooklyn and the Bronx would vote 70 to 80 per cent Democratic, as they usually did.

A Democratic party worker, after taking this correspondent into the kitchen to be out of earshot of others in his home, predicted that Mr. Kennedy would lose "10 to 15 percent of the Jewish vote that normally goes Democratic," says the New York Times. Several officials of Jewish communal organizations agreed privately that Mr. Kennedy might lose some Jewish votes but their estimates were lower, ranging downward from 10 per cent to nine-tenths of one per cent.

They suggested that the present coolness toward Mr. Kennedy was partly owing to the sharp disappointment of many Jewish voters over the Democrats' failure to nominate Adlai E. Stevenson and that the coolness might evaporate as the campaign progressed.

"You hear some talk now of people defecting to Nixon," one Stevenson supporter said, "I predict they'll shrink back in 'terminal horror' when they confront that Republican lever."

In Washington, Mr. Javits asserted that Jews tended to vote for liberal candidates and that Mr. Nixon, since the convention, had aroused "a greater interest among liberals generally" — meaning greater than there used to be.

But another Republican politician of the Jewish faith said he was unable to discern any major Jewish swing to Mr. Nixon. He said he could not recall a campaign in which Jewish sentiment was "so confused and uncommitted."

Mr. Javits has found it necessary to deny what he called "scurrilous and vicious rumors" that Mr. Nixon was an anti-Semite, says the New York Times. The Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith said that the most persistent and widely circulated imputation of anti-Semitism to Mr. Nixon dated from his 1950 campaign for the Senate against Helen Gahagan Douglas.

Mr. Nixon is said to have reminded California audiences that Mrs. Douglas "was married to a man named Melvyn Douglas, whose real name is Hesselberg."

The Anti-Defamation League checked into the allegation in 1952, the year Mr. Nixon received the Vice-Presidential nomination. A seven-man team spent five months tracking down rumors. The team concluded that Mr. Nixon never uttered the remark attributed to him and found that he had "manifested no anti-Semitism in the fight."

Henry Edward Schultz, national chairman of the Anti-Defamation League, said:

"Questions have been raised with the League, and are likely to continue to be raised, about the attitude of Vice President Nixon and Senator Kennedy toward Jews. We believe both men to be wholly free of anti-Semitic bias. Nor is there any question that the two Vice-Presidential candidates are free of such bias."

Despite this exculpation, several Jewish voters recalled the bitter Nixon-Douglas campaign when pressed for reasons for their expressed dislike of Mr. Nixon.

It is apparent that among these liberals the "prior image" of Mr. Nixon, which Republican campaign strategists are trying to replace, remains vivid.

"Nixon is identified with McCarthyite tactics," commented a young lawyer in his midtown office, "and that will hurt him with Jewish voters. Of course, Kennedy is also vulnerable on McCarthyism — he ducked the censure vote — but at least he is cleaner on this issue than Nixon."

Mr. Kennedy was in a New York hospital recovering from surgery on December 2, 1954, when the Senate voted to censure Mr. McCarthy. He did not announce then, nor for a long time thereafter how he would have voted on the motion, says the New York Times. He was chided by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1958 for his alleged failure to "stand up and be counted."

Mr. Kennedy told a TV panel in 1958 that he thought the Senate's decision to censure Mr. McCarthy was "reasonable." Asked last May 4 if he was "willing to take a definite stand on Senator McCarthy," Mr. Kennedy replied, "Yes, I have. I said that I'd support the censure."

Several Stevenson supporters observed that Mr. Kennedy's father had been an American Firster and had admired Mr. McCarthy to the point of sending him money.

It was the "father image" — the specter of Joseph P. Kennedy lurking behind scenes and masterminding his son's campaign — that disturbed the liberals most.

A Democratic worker in a heavily Jewish Brooklyn district called the elder Kennedy "the number one bogey" of the campaign.

"Many Jewish voters feel a personal revulsion against Joe Kennedy," he said. "They find it difficult not to transfer that dislike

Says Jews Here Have No Rights To Tire In Aid To Israel

Jewish educator and historian asserted in Washington, D.C., that American Jews "have no right to become tired" of fund-raising efforts for Israel until that nation's people had achieved full economic independence.

Dr. Abram L. Sachar, president of Brandeis University, told 450 American Jewish leaders of the United Jewish Appeal that "the exigencies of the creation of the state, the crushing military burden, the need to settle hundreds of thousands of impecunious immigrants, the enormous demands to establish health standards — all of these have made the little state terribly vulnerable."

He then added that "we have no right to become tired, for we are not shoring up a country that is unwilling to carry any sacrifices itself," says the New York Times. Dr. Sachar's talk was one of several at the opening of a two-day United Jewish Appeal leadership conference at the Shoreham Hotel to assess the progress of the 1960 fund campaign and to open the second half of a nation-wide drive to meet the needs of Jewish refugees and immigrants, particularly in Israel.

Dr. Sachar told the Jewish leaders, representing various sections of the country, that "what Israel's people accept through our great philanthropic campaigns is not for themselves. It is accepted in order to keep the land open for the only spot on earth where every

U. S. Hadassah Leade[r] ounces Soviet Press For Anti-Semitism

The head of the largest Zionist group in the world assailed "the ever-mounting campaign against Judaism and individual Jews being conducted by Soviet provincial newspapers." The denunciation was made by Dr. Miriam K. Freund, president of Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America, says the New York Times. Dr. Freund, who recently returned from the Soviet Union, said that in the last year "the major newspapers in the different Soviet republics have carried about one hundred articles that were clearly anti-Jewish in content and intent."

The Zionist leader spoke at the four-day, forty-sixth annual convention of the organization at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, in New York. More than 2,500 delegates, representing 318,000 members, gathered for the conference.

Dr. Freund, who attended the International Congress of Orientalists in the Soviet Union, said the Soviet articles left no doubt "as to the Jewishness of the person pilloried . . . by stress upon all Jewish aspects of his given name and surname; upon his Jewish friends and relatives, upon his contact with the synagogue."

The articles, she said, are "fraught with potential disaster and cannot but destroy any possibility of achieving amity between Jews and non-Jews in the Soviet Union." It has been estimated that 2,500,000 to 3,000,000 Jews live in the Soviet Union. Major Jewish groups frequently have charged that the Soviet Union suppresses Jewish cultural and spiritual life.

Dr. Freund said she believed Soviet leaders were "not sufficiently aware of the deep significance which the treatment of minorities — especially of Jews — in the Soviet Union has for decent, friendly, forward-looking men and women throughout the world."

"The Jews of the Soviet Union," she said, reports the New York Times, "should have restored to them not only full equality of treatment . . . but they should be permitted to have contact with their fellow-Jews abroad as well as with the remnants of their families elsewhere. The Soviet Union can earn nothing but good-will everywhere by a change of 'line' in this respect."

In another address, Bruce McDaniel, former administrator of the United States Operations Mission in Israel, said that nations to which the United States cooperation was offered should "know what their responsibility shall be in accepting what we have to offer."

Mr. McDaniel said two principles of cooperation should be an integral part of any joint program of technical assistance and economic aid. The first, he said, should state "that we offer our assistance so that each free nation shall become self-reliant and capable of making its contribution to the security and the survival of the free world, and that the assumption of this obligation is common to both parties."

The other, he said, "should state that the nation to which we offer our cooperation, as quickly as it is able, will do for some other nation what we have tried to do for it."

Mrs. Benjamin Gottesman, Hadassah's treasurer, said the organization had raised $10,900,000 in the last year for its social service and medical projects in Israel. In a message, President Eisenhower hailed the organization's health

MONTREAL MEETINGS

• CANADIAN JEWISH CONGRESS •

A submission to Prime Minister Jean M. Lesage, of Quebec, in his Montreal office, presented views of the Canadian Jewish community on certain public issues and requested certain legislative enactments. The delegation was led by Samuel Bronfman, national president of Congress, who was a co-signatory of the submission with Harold Lande, Q.C., Eastern Region chairman. Mr. Bronfman stated in introducing the submission that the Congress wished to make it abundantly clear that "though our representations deal with matters of inter-group relations and right of citizens, we do not pre-suppose a condition in our province which cries out for remedies and which begs for solutions". Mr. Bronfman reminded the Premier that "Canadian Jewry, which this year celebrated the 200th Anniversary of the first Jewish settlement in Canada, found in Quebec, Three Rivers, and Montreal, a welcome and understanding from the very first days of settlement." He further stated that "it was in Quebec where the famous Ezekiel Hart case led to the Act of 1832, which removed political disabilities from Jews, being the first legal entity of the British Empire to do so." The following four recommendations were then presented to the Premier: a) a proposal, by way of amendment to the Civil Code, to declare discrimination against any person on grounds of race, national origin, colour, or religion, as being against public order and good morals; b) a proposal to re-examine a fairly recent amendment to the Civil Code (article 56a), Change of Names Act, and in recognition of its inherent complexities and danger to further amend it by simplifying procedures and providing judicial instead of legislative proceedings; c) a suggestion to enact legislation to prevent discrimination in employment such as is on the statute books now of six Provinces and the Federal authority, i.e., A Fair Employment Practices Act; d) a further suggestion to enact legislation to prevent discrimination in places of public accommodation and which appertains in five Provinces, which statute is usually known as a Fair Accommodation Practices Act. Other members of the delegation were: Monroe Abbey, Q.C., chairman, national executive committee; H. Blank, M.L.A.; S. D. Cohen, chairman, Eastern Region public relations committee; Joseph H. Fine, Q.C., national treasurer; Saul Hayes, executive vice-president; Milton Klein.

four large tomatoes
one can tuna (seven ounces)
one tablespoon chopped parsley one tablespoon lemon juice three-quarters cup chopped celery
one-quarter cup mayonnaise

With a fork, hold each tomato over a gas or electric range unit over high heat, and rotate until the skin splits. Or put it in boiling water. Then peel it off and cut out the stem. Chill, covered, in the refrigerator. Drain the tuna, place it in a one-quart bowl, and flake it with a fork. Add the lemon juice and parsley, toss lightly, cover and chill. At serving time add the celery, or diced cucumber, and salad dressing. Starting at the stem edge, cut each tomato about two-thirds of the way down, into eight wedges. Spread them apart and fill the tomatoes with the tuna mixture. Top with a bit more salad dressing, and garnish with a few stuffed olive slices or the yolk of a hard-cooked egg. Serve on lettuce, trimmed with radish roses. For chicken filling instead of tuna, use one and one-half cups cut-up chicken, and French dressing instead of lemon juice.

SAYS JEWS

Jew is immediately welcome and where there are no restrictive immigration acts to hold him off."

For the Israelis, Dr. Sachar said, "dependence is an obsessive nightmare," adding that "freedom in itself, the right of free speech, free elections, and free assembly mean little without ultimate freedom from dependence upon others."

Morris W. Bernstein, general chairman of the Appeal, said in a report that funds raised to date had provided "vital and meaningful" assistance to 600,000 ~~Jewish~~ men, women, and children since the beginning of the year.

However, the Appeal's leader declared that these include 345,000 still "unabsorbed immigrants in Israel, plus the additional 235,000 persons in need including this year's arrivals in Israel, distressed Jews in twenty-four overseas lands, and refugees to the United States."

He reported that "thousands of immigrants of previous years still live in emergency-erected, miserable tin-hut villages" in Israel. He pointed out that 4,000 housing units were now under construction, and 3,000 more units were planned, says the New York Times. At the same time, he warned that "insufficient funds may again postpone the plans for stimulating economic self-reliance in behalf of a group of 5,300 farming families in Israel, representing 20,000 individuals."

New Clinic Is For Retired Workers

The Charles Weinstein Geriatric Center for retired clothing workers which was built through the cooperation of the Philadelphia Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and the Philadelphia Clothing Manufacturers Association, was dedicated in that city.

The one-story structure, which connects with the Sidney Hillman Medical Center, was named for the man who for thirty years was manager of the Philadelphia Joint Board and a vice president of the international union, says the New York Times. Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated, told about 300 persons at the dedication that other industries and the Government should build similar centers so that retired persons could have medical care and comfortable retirement "as a right and not as a charity."

WIDESPREAD APATHY, MARKED DISTRUST

to the son. They agree that the sins of the father shouldn't be visited upon the son, but they are worried because this particular father has had a great influence on his children."

Asked why they felt so strongly about Mr. Kennedy's father, some Jewish voters said they had heard of the existence of a letter in which Joseph P. Kennedy had indicated approval of the Hitler regime.

In Washington, two Democratic Congressmen said rumors about the "Kennedy letter" were getting wide circulation.

"It's going to be murder," one of them said. He had not seen the alleged document, says the New York Times. He had only heard that the letter, purportedly written by Mr. Kennedy when he was Ambassador to Britain, at the time of Munich, discounted the necessity of a firm stand by the United States against Hitler and suggested that the Roosevelt Administration overrated the influence of the American Jewish community.

A spokesman for the Anti-Defamation League said that agency knew nothing about the existence of the letter and suggested that the rumors were based on some captured documents from the German Foreign Office.

These documents were not written by Ambassador Kennedy but by Herbert von Dirksen, the German envoy to London. In them, Herr von Dirksen described two conversations with Ambassador Kennedy in 1938.

Ambassador von Dirksen reported to Berlin that in his first meeting with Mr. Kennedy the American Ambassador expressed sympathy for Germany and said that the overwhelming majority of Americans wanted peace and friendly relations with Germany.

Herr von Dirksen wrote: "The Ambassador then touched upon the Jewish question and stated that it was naturally of great importance to German-American relations. In this connection it was not so much the fact that he wanted to get rid of the Jews that was so harmful to us, but rather the loud clamor with which we accompanied this purpose. He himself understood our Jewish policy completely; he was from Boston and there, in one golf club, and in other clubs, no Jews had been admitted for the past fifty years.

"His father had not been elected Mayor because he was a Catholic; in the United States, therefore, such pronounced attitudes were quite common, but people avoided making so much outward fuss about it."

Excerpts from the Dirksen dispatches are apparently being used in a whispering campaign against Senator Kennedy, says the New York Times. Anticipating this, James M. Landis, former dean of the Harvard Law School and a supporter of Mr. Kennedy, has been going through the former Ambassador's records, hoping to find Mr. Kennedy's version of the talks.

When the captured Nazi documents were published by the State Department in 1949, former Ambassador Kennedy called the Dirksen dispatches "complete poppycock." He said Herr von Dirksen "must have been trying very hard to set himself right in Germany by telling the German Foreign Office the things he thought they'd like to hear."

Mr. Landis commented recently that the Dirksen dispatches "sounded fairly unbelievable." He said Ambassador Kennedy had called on Dirksen in an attempt to gain information about secret talks that were going on between a top Nazi official and Neville Chamberlain.

Democrats agreed something had to be done to neutralize the whispering campaign.

High Holy Day Message

BY DR. SAMUEL BELKIN, PRESIDENT OF YESHIVA UNIVERSITY, IN NEW YORK

Every Rosh Hashonah, Jews all over the world pray for the rebuilding of the world in accordance with the kingship of the Lord, and never before in human history has the world had need of divine rulership as it has at the present. While it is some years since we went through the most destructive war in the history of mankind, we are still floundering in our search for a new pattern upon which to reconstruct the world.

If at this moment we do not turn our hearts heavenward and establish the kingship of God upon this world, then all our glorious accomplishments will fade into insignificance. We must remember that our enemies are those who fight against divine and moral guidance, against the continuity of man's quest for progress and civilization.

Rosh Hashonah and repentance, say our Sages, mean the re-creation of the human personality, the spiritual rebirth of the individual and the nation. True, we should do everything in our power to aid our brethren wherever they may be and whatever crisis may overtake them. But by saving others, one does not necessarily save himself. We must bear in mind that if American Jewry is to function properly it must be spiritually reborn and there can be no spiritual rebirth without knowledge of the Torah.

At this time of the new year, of prayer and festive joy, of self-judgement and pledge of self-improvement, Yeshiva University re-pledges itself to its original purpose, the development of a generation here in America which will reflect a harmonious blending of Jewish traditions and the heritage of the great academies of Jewish learning with a liberal education in the arts and sciences. These we have done and will continue to do.

At the start of 5721, Yeshiva University faces the new year ready to answer the real message of Rosh Hashonah, a call for the spiritual revitalization of Jewish life. In partnership with every enlightened member of the Jewish community, Yeshiva University will continue to foster the light of Torah and knowledge as a growing source of service to the American Jewish community.

Say Happy New Year!

HAPPY and PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR

Rosh Hashonah Message

BY RABBI MAX L. JACOBS, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED SYNAGOGUE OF AMERICA

At the New Year of 5721, we are exalted by great hopes and burdened by profound fears. Within the span of a lifetime we have entered many revolutionary ages and we stand now at the beginning of the Space Age in which yesterday's fantasies are today's facts. Momentarily we are expecting that a human being will reach outer space.

Our High Holy Day season is referred to as the Days of Awe and indeed we live in great awe today. We stand in such great awe of nuclear power and space missiles that many of us are forgetting what it means to live in awe of God. Evil seems to loom larger than good. We seem to be more impressed with the speed of computing machines than with the sanctity and dignity of every human being. We devote more attention to outer space than to "inner space."

The New Year summons us to take a "good look" at ourselves and at our world. We pray to be inscribed in the Book of Life. Yet in a large measure the decision is in our own hands. Let us seek to be deserving of the Book of Life. May we all choose life, that we may deserve it.

May the old year end, and with it its curses.

May the new year begin, and with it its blessings.

New Year Message

BY PRIME MINISTER DAVID BEN-GURION, OF ISRAEL

At the New Year 5721, I send the supporters of the United Jewish Appeal heartfelt greetings from the people of Israel. During the coming year we shall celebrate the thirteenth anniversary of our Statehood. In this short period of our renewed sovereignty we have overcome grave and seemingly insuperable problems. We have helped rescue hundreds of thousands of men, women and children from lands of uncertainty and even terror, bringing them to freedom, and this task is being continued.

We have labored and still labor to give these immigrants a life of dignity and security. We have striven and still strive to build homes, farms and industries to assure our stability. Of the many problems facing us, one of the greatest is the consolidation of our farm settlements. We have placed immigrants on the soil, but now we must bring the immigrant villages up to the point of economic self-sufficiency.

Hard-working citizens rooted in the soil producing food and industrial crops for export are our greatest strength. Let us continue our mutual undertaking. Your past dedication indicated success in the future. May the New Year 5721 herald an era of new vigor and accomplishment for the United Jewish Appeal and for the Jews of North America.

iasm thus far. The emotional quotient is off. It's going to be difficult to get money from them."

Another party worker said that only strenuous campaigning by former Governor Herbert H. Lehman and "other big Jewish names" could save the day. Mr. Lehman is resting now at Lake Placid. His associate, Julius C. Edelstein, said in Washington that the former Governor "expects to be very active" in the campaign. He said Mr. Lehman would make "six or eight major speeches" for Senator Kennedy.

Washington that he hoped voters "will realize that we don't visit the sins of the father upon the son — assuming there were any sins."

Mr. Landis recalled that Ambassador Kennedy had been "quite active in assisting Jewish emigres who were trying to get to Venezuela and Brazil."

Joseph P. Sharkey, the Brooklyn Democratic leader, said Ambassador Kennedy was "only reflecting the views of the Roosevelt Administration" when he opposed intervention in the early stages of the war.

One Democratic Congressman said that Jewish voters seemed "neutral" on Senator Kennedy until the circulation of the "Joe Kennedy letter." He had been aware of "no antagonism or friendliness."

"Now," he said, "I have a feeling that he (Kennedy) is going to be in real trouble with the Jewish vote."

Mr. Kennedy's religion was cited by some Jews as the basic reason for their indecision and apathy in the campaign, says the New York Times. "We feel that the Catholic Church is authoritarian, that it imposes on its adherents certain social and political as well as economic views," said an official of a Jewish agency.

Any Catholic who is a good Catholic might find the church's views in conflict with what he might otherwise concede as being in the public interest. Such a conflict might occur in issues dealing with birth control and divorce laws.

"Another fear is that a Catholic President might be less flexible in dealing with the Russians.

"Finally, the school issue. The Jewish community is very strongly committed to the separation of church and state. We want to insure that the schools remain secular institutions."

In the suburbs, Jewish voters said the school issue was a source of rising tension. Jews were generally opposed to Federal aid to parochial schools, they said. Some expressed the belief that Catholics, in retaliation for this stand, invariably voted against school bond issues.

In a Connecticut suburb, a young doctor said: "I can't vote for a Catholic for President and I won't vote for Nixon. I'll just stay away from the polls."

Back in the city, in the heavily Jewish working class districts, voters seemed unconcerned about the religious issue. Sitting on a park bench in the East Flatbush section of Brooklyn, a furrier summed up the neighborhood view. "Kennedy," he said, "is another Franklin D. Roosevelt."

In Manhattan, a Democratic fund-raiser said contributions were slow, says the New York Times. "Stevenson people were heavy contributors in 1952 and 1956," he said. "They've shown no enthu-and social welfare programs. Another speaker was Avraham Harman, Israel's Ambassador to the United States.

An influential leader of Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America, took issue with Premier David Ben-Gurion of Israel on the role of the Zionist movement, says the New York Times. Mrs. Samuel W. Halprin, who twice has headed Hadassah, the largest Zionist group in the world, singled out in particular Mr. Ben-Gurion's assertion that the Zionist movement was a "scaffolding" for Israel and was no longer needed.

Mrs. Halprin charged that Mr. Ben-Gurion's criticism of the Zionist movement "has neither the support of his Government nor of his party."

She said the Premier, "aware of the affection, the goodwill, the admiration that most Jews have for Israel, believes that the need for a Zionist movement may have passed."

She asserted that the movement "was never the scaffolding; rather it was an integral part of the building." She termed the movement a retaining wall for Israel, adding that "a builder who breaks such a wall does so at the peril to the safety of the building itself."

Mrs. Halprin, who is acting chairman of the Jewish Agency, American Section, Inc., said the Zionist movement's task was far from accomplished. In the next ten years, she said, it must concentrate on achieving "the totality of Jewish life, firmly committed to the belief in the unity of the Jewish people, recognizing in Israel the centrality of Jewish life in its cultural and spiritual aspects."

"Americans," she said, according to the New York Times, "are trekking to all parts of the world to bring their know-how and their skills to newly emerging nations; surely, the American Jew cannot do less for Israel."

The delegates called on the next National Administration "to vigorously pursue" a program for economic progress, political stability and peace in the Middle East as "necessary to America's security and to the defense of freedom." They also called for the United States to exercise strong influence to open the Suez Canal to ships of all nations and to take the initiative in promoting direct negotiations between Israel and the Arab states.

Mrs. Mortimer Jacobson, chairman of the organization's Zionist affairs committee, scored the "too many unfriendly sources" that "have been trying to befuddle the lofty objectives of Zionism, especially now that Israel has been established."

Michael Comay, Israel's Permanent Representative to the United Nations, spoke at the dinner session.
